The Independent Publisher Book Awards (the “IPPYs”) are intended to bring increased recognition to the thousands of exemplary independent, university, and self-published titles published each year. The awards are open to all members of the independent publishing industry, and to authors and publishers worldwide who produce books intended for an English-speaking market. Since the inaugural contest in 1996, over 5,000 books have received IPPY Awards, along with the recognition, credibility, and increased sales that a book award can bring. Independent spirit and expertise comes from publishers of all sizes and budgets, and books are judged with that in mind.

Book reflects seventy different voices on cancer's front lines

Collection of essays and art offers the personal reflections of those who diagnose, treat, and live with cancer, providing hope and comfort and reducing fear

Artist Marion Behr's highly acclaimed collaborative guide to surviving cancer, which has just been awarded the Gold IPPY award in the health category for 2015, began in an unusual fashion. As a result of radiation treatment after a diagnosis of breast cancer, she created a collection of thirty-five sculptures whose armatures are actual radiation cradles used by radiation patients.

During a gallery exhibition of these pieces, a panel discussion with two doctors and four cancer survivors convinced her that a book compiling the experiences of cancer patients, oncologists, nurses, and others was needed. She began assembling authors, and some five years later, Surviving Cancer: Our Voices & Choices was born.

Behr explains that the voices in Surviving Cancer provide a compilation of information that helps ease the path every cancer patient walks, male and female alike. Her book's collaborative "cancer team" includes survivors, family doctors, oncologists, social workers, health care providers, organization leaders and members, and financial advisors, all of whom share their "voices and choices" in Surviving Cancer.

Survivors' stories are deeply personal and often support a medical perspective. Throughout the book, images of Behr's sculptures reflecting the moods of women on the cancer journey support and give voice to the many emotions that all who deal with their cancer – men and women, patient and caregiver – feel.

Behr comments, "Each of the seventy authors has an intriguing background. One is a Nobel Laureate, another is the head of cancer research at the Hebrew University, one is a director of a cancer hospital, and another is an oncologist who was awarded the Order of Canada for his work on breast cancer. Many other notable individuals promptly responded to requests for articles. One of my objectives is that through their voices, the book offers hope and comfort and helps reduce fear for newly-diagnosed cancer patients and their families."

“The story of cancer is as individual as the person relating it. Artist and breast cancer survivor Behr includes anecdotes from patients and recommendations from physicians and medical professionals in order to provide comfort and knowledge for those on the same journey...With questions patients and family members should be asking (and their answers) and a useful glossary...Beautifully designed, a worthwhile addition...” ~ Library Journal Review

The book is the recipient of the New Apple 2015 Medal in the Specialty Book category as well as the 2015 Gold Medal in the Health category from the Independent Publisher (IPPY) Book Awards.
